Food is important everywhere. Every country, and sometimes every city, has typical dishes. In this text, you'll find out about some countries and their typical dishes.

Australia's typical dish is meat pie. This is a small baked pie filled with minced beef and cheese. In many places in Australia, people add gravy to their pie, which is a sauce made from the juice that comes from meat as you cook it, and then you mix it with flour and water. The gravy often contains onions and mushrooms. Just before you eat it, you should add ketchup to the top of the pie.

Austria is famous for its wiener Schnitzel. This is a breaded veal that is fried in butter. In Vienna, it is typically served with a potato salad. It is similar to milanesas, but not exactly the same.

In many countries, rice and fish are the main ingredients for typical dishes. In Bangladesh, the fish they use is ilish, marinated in a boiled banana leaf. The fish is then cooked in the same marinade (juice and served with white rice. Biryani is a typical rice dish cooked with spices – curry, oregano, among others – and meat. Fried onion rings and boiled eggs accompany the rice. There are vegan versions as well, that is, without any eggs. In Uzbekistan, you should try their traditional dish: plov. It is rice cooked with meat, vegetables and various spices. The most common vegetables used are carrots, onions and garlic. The dish is typically served with fried onions.

You might not see many Philippian restaurants around, but their traditional dish, chicken adobo, is delicious. It is chicken marinated in garlic and vinegar, and then fried in oil. It is typically served with white rice.

To complete the selection, we must refer to the Brazilian feijoada, which is made of black beans cooked with beef and pork. Sometimes vegetables are added, like tomatoes, potatoes and carrots. Some people don't think the dish looks very appetizing because of the black beans, but it is delicious.
